

Alastair MacGibbon Director, Trust & Safety, eBay Australia & New Zealand

Alastair MacGibbon is a respected authority on high-tech crime including Internet fraud and a range of Internet security issues.

At eBay, Alastair heads the Australian and New Zealand division of the international Trust & Safety team. Alastair is responsible for educating consumers about online safety, building partnerships with industry and government and assisting in the development of new technologies that keep eBay at the forefront of online safety.

Alastair works closely with Australian and international law enforcement agencies to help bring offenders to justice.

Alastair has 15 years of national and international policing experience and is the founding Director of the Australian High Tech Crime Centre (AHTCC) - a law enforcement unit hosted by the Australian Federal Police to coordinate Australia's efforts to combating serious crime involving technology.

During his time with the AHTCC, Alastair pioneered new thinking in law enforcement approaches to high tech crime investigations and harm minimisation strategies including innovative industry engagement and co-opting of public sector agencies to the Centre.

As a Federal Agent with the Australian Federal Police he served in numerous roles in Canberra, Sydney and Melbourne before becoming the AFP Overseas Liaison Officer at the Australian Embassy in Washington DC for three years.

Alastair is a graduate of the US Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Academy and has a Bachelor of Arts and a Master of International Studies from the University of Sydney.
